Introduction

This mini-toolkit of worship resources was created by the Minneapolis Area Synod's EcoFaith Energy Campaign Team. This team focuses on renewable energy & power from perspectives of stewardship, creation care, advocacy, sustainability, organizing, vocation, and more. As we approach Pentecost, a festival of Spirit, wind, and fire, the team believes it is a perfect opportunity for all of us to come together to contemplate where God is in our current system of energy, and explore—in big and small ways—how we can all better care for God's gift of power, the thing that allows our modern society to function. You are invited to consider the following resources and utilize them in whatever ways resonate with your own faith community, knowing that churches around the synod will be doing the same.

Prayers

Consider including the following petitions in your Prayers of the People or Prayers of Intercession during the month of May and Pentecost:

- Sunday, May 7: God of creation, renew your earth. Help us to be stewards of your beauty, your resources, your world, that every future generation might know your good work.
- Sunday, May 14: God of wind, thank you for the gentle breeze and the powerful squall. Help us to cherish this gift and explore how it might move us through our daily lives.
- Sunday, May 21: God of the sun, your power is great. Let your light shine down into every dark corner of our world, bringing hope and new life. Let that same light bring clean, renewable energy for all your people.
- Sunday, May 28: God of water, you moved over the deep waters in the beginning and continue to flow around this whole globe today. Fill us with the desire to care for your waters, seeing in them beauty, possibilities for energy, and new life.
- Sunday, June 4 (Pentecost): God of power, your Spirit comes to the people and sets them in motion. Move us into love, service, justice, and possibility. Help us to better care for and steward the ways in which our world moves.

A prayer of the day for Pentecost Sunday:

Creator God, We give you thanks for the gift of the Spirit, poured out for the whole world.
Your Spirit moved over the people on Pentecost like a mighty rushing wind, setting their hearts on fire with your love.
Send that same Spirit to us today, empowering us to care for the rushing wind, the shining sun, and the mighty waters—your gifts of creation that allow us to grow, learn, and thrive.

Let us join with our communities, political leaders, and _____ (name the energy provider for your community) to ensure that the energy we use is renewably sourced, equitably distributed, and safely utilized.

AMEN

Scripture & Sermon Ideas

In addition to the Pentecost text (Acts 2), consider reading Genesis 1:1-5, John 3:1-10, Mark 4:39-41, Job 26:7-14, Psalm 104:1-4, Nahum 1:3, Psalm 29:3-9 or any text that explores wind, fire, water, or care for creation.

A few sermon thoughts:

—In order to capture the power of the wind, you need to put the windmill where the wind actually blows. So it is with the Spirit—the church is called to be (or follow) where the spirit moves.

—On Pentecost, the Spirit blew over the people, inciting growth of the early church. Our church today is similarly powered by the Spirit. Our society is powered by energy. Are there similarities in how we steward our engagement with the Spirit and energy sourcing in sustainable ways?

—How might the power grid from which we get our electricity be similar to the network of an interconnected, Spirit-led Church?

—What difference does it make when we source our energy and enthusiasm from a sustaining Spirit versus earthly means? Might that impact how we see sourcing our energy for powering the world?

—Fire and wind are present in the Creation story, sometimes show up as purifying agents, lead to change, bring power, and so much more. How are they showing up in our text? How do we steward these holy gifts in our world?
